pers gave him active support prior to May 1915. During the winter months the war secretary had an nounced the "blg drive" would be-gin about the first of May. The bat-tle of Neuve Chappelle occurred in May, and England believed this was the beginning of the big drive. Shortly afterward, reports reached England that the drive had halted owing to a shortage of munitions, especially high-explosive shells. A section of the London press then declared that Kitchener had made a serious mis-take in providing large quantities of take in providing large quantities of shrapnel and insufficient high-explosives. Newspaper attacks went so far as to suggest his being displaced as war, secretary, but the majority of the papers defended him. It was agreed that the raising of a big army and supplying munitions at the same time was too great a task for one man. The discussion developed. one man. The discussion developed the formation of a Coalition Cabinet and the creation of the new portfo-lio of minister of munitions, of which David Lloyd George took charge, while Kitchener remained as war-minister. Without his crowning achievement as the great organizer of the British campaign in the European war, Kit-chener had already won wide and lasting fame by his many campaigns in Egypt, South Africa and in In-

He was born June 24, 1850, in County Kerry, Ireland, a fact that gave rise to a general belief that he was of Irish blood, but his parents wore of French and English descent. His father was a soldier, but of no very high rank. He had managed to climb to the lieutenant-colonelcy of a dragoon regiment, when he retired to the estate in Ireland where Horato the estate in freland where Hora-tio Herbert Kitchener; the to-be-dis-titiguished son, was born. Young Kitchener received his fundamental military education at _ Woolwich, where he displayer only ordinary brillancy, with the exception of his liking for mathematics. On gradua-ting he received a commission in the royal engineers, but when not yet 21 years of age he attached himself to a French army in the Franco-Prussian war. He had been in the service SLABS—For a short time I can supply fects of Mrs. Louise Gillam deceased.

Kitchener's experience in European warfare—prior to his direction of the great war of 1914—therefore, had been limited only to a few baloon flights in France.

An Eaged Volunteer.
In 1874 when a British expedition was sent out to survey Western Pa-lestine, Kitchener was one of the eager volunteers accepted for this service. For months he traveled over the hills and valleys of this Bible Land with his theodolite and Bible Land with his theodolite and surveying tape, and with this life in the open he gred to be a tall, gaunt subaltern with a hard face well burned His contribution to the topographical knowledge of the Holy Land completed, young Kitchener was sent to Cyprus which Great Britain had just acquired, to organize a system of courts, a work in which he displayed administrative ability and tact.

ise-a system of couvis, a work in which he displayed administrative ability and tact.

It was while there, in 1892, that he took his first step on the published that was to lead him eventually to Khartum. Tropose was already brewing in the Sudan. Hearing that the Egyptian almy was being organized by Sir Evelyn Wood, young Kitchener saw his opportunity with unstring instinct and lost no time in offering his services. The military suthorities, recognising at once his insight into the native character, but him in the installigence department, and from the very outset of his Egyptian career negotiations of the ulmost importance were entrusted to him and carried out with invariable access. the lessons of this flasco, with , its failure of transport and intelligence departments, and avoided these troubles in the expedition which he him-self led some years later. In the meantime Kitchener was employed in innumerable tights and raids against the Dervishes or Habdists of South-ern Egypt. In 1886 he became gov-ernor of the Red Sea territories and set in motion a series of raids on the notorious Osman Digna, the Dervish leader. In one of these raids Kitchener's men were flankal and put to flight, during which he received a bullet which broke his jaw.

By this time much was heard in England of Kitchener's work in Egypt and when he returned there for a short rest he was received with honor and nominated aide-de-camp of honor and nominated aide-de-camp of Queen Victoria. With his health recruited, he went back to Egypt where, on the resignation of Sir Francis Grenfell, he was appointed Sirdar (Commandd) of the Egyptian army. His really great career dates from that time.

As an instance of the self-confidence with which Kitchener undertook his tasks in Egypt is recalled how he dealt with the war office as few generals before him ever dared. On one occasion he sent home for a

On one occasion he sent home for a special kind of gun. The war office suggested another kind. The Siddar repeated his orders. Next he was informed that the war office guns had been forwarded, whereupon he dispatched a politely insolent message home saying that he was very grateful, but the war office could keep its guns. His message read: I can throw stones at the dervishers myself." As a consequence, the guns he asked for were forwarded without delay. The littchener campaign that end ed with the recapture of Kharfum was considered by military experts as perfectly organized and faultlessly conducted. The Egyptian army that Kitchener had worked up to such remarkable efficiency was, when he first took charge of it, a band of unpaid, unfed and undermined fella-heen. It was said to be an carmy "without stomach, heart or back bone," but Kitchener worked over these helpless reeds of broken na-tives and made of them some of the finest of black battations.

The fight at Omdurman, Septem

er 2, 1896, just across the Nile from Khartum, was the greatest battle of Kitchener's time in Egypt: Osman Digna faced him with 50,000 Mahdists, while he had but 20,000 men. When the battle was over, 11,000 of the Mahdists had been killed out-right, 16,000 wounded, and 4,000 taken prisoners, while the English and Egyptian loss altogether was under A Popular Hero.

With the capture of Khartum, cap-ital of the Sudan, which meant the re-establishment of British posses-sion of these upper reaches 5.2 the Nile, Kitchend became the object of hero-worship in England. His campaign had been, and is to this
